Tracey focuses on the development of highly technical interior spaces. She specializes in designing and coordinating data and security-driven environments and has worked with a range of Fortune 500 clients throughout the U.S. Before joining Eckenhoff Saunders, Tracey spent ten years as a project manager for the Chicago Design Network. In that capacity, Tracey worked closely with property managers and in-house architectural teams to create attractive and employee-centered environments aligned with brand standards. With clients including Hewlett Packard, Agilent Technologies, Verigy, and Informatica, she developed prototypes for standard office functions that could be implemented across multiple sites, including HALO virtual conference rooms and commons and shipping and receiving departments. Tracey's success lies in her focus on client service, which relies on clear communication and aligned coordination for all users and the project team.
